Clean-up Campaign

'Avalanche' Sweeps Across Heber Valley

HEBER—An "avalanche" is sweeping across Heber Valley, taking old barns, sheds, fences and debris with it leaving nothing to mar the landscape of the valley when the clean-up campaign has been completed.

Each city and town has a clean-up program, with chairmen and block captains. "This campaign is gaining momentum now that spring has arrived in our valley," said Douglas Murdock, chairman at Heber City. "I can scarcely keep track of all the projects that are being started."

Duane Smith Daniels, chairman, reports 43 truck loads of debris were hauled from the roadway leading into the eastern part of the county. County and city road crews are assisting with the clean-up.

In Wallsburg, huge ash piles mark the spots where several barns have been burned and James Phillips reports 15 truck loads of rubbish removed.

Dr. Arvil Stark, chairman,

state committee for beautification and landscape, who inaugurated the campaign here in April, said he could hardly believe such an improvement made during the past month.

"Heber City will surely qualify for the National Cleanest Town Achievement Award," he said, "if a scrap book and adequate records are kept on projects that are completed."

Mother ^{Venola Cowley} said that she thinks that Olive was first married to a Naylor - he died & then she married a Bond, but we only remember her as a widow. If we are right about the house - then you can get more information from Max or Joe Bond: They'd be about 60-62. I've heard that they attend the Provo Temple, often Mother remembers playing the piano for Olive, as she had a great singing voice.

Mother said that if this is the Bond home, that it has been remodeled many times.
